

Backup of Consciousness

One should also take enough care to preserve all those precious weapons that only a child has in his or her armory, which helps a child to explore and perceive the world around him or her in a very special way, the way which is deplorably missing in most of the grown-ups. A true grown-up is someone successful in carrying the spirit of childhood into his or her adult stage, that purity of a flower that exudes only from a child, that wide-eyed excitement and spontaneous appreciation of a child, that is full of awe and wonder at the universe like a child. Our living God, by divine coincidence, is simultaneously a child and an adult, and we always find in Him a smooth and uniform integration of both stages. To feel the pulse of creation, one needs that unique way of looking around like a child. Only a sincere inquiring mind with a reverential approach can dissect the riddle of post-death-existence. Our brain is just like a computer and our consciousness is like a computer program. So the core problem of post-death-existence lies in the issue of conservation and preservation of memories. When the question is about memory, it is never destroyed, it is always there, preserved and protected, in an altogether different way, different from the binary digital system we are acquainted with. The backup of our consciousness is being continuously created and our overall consciousness can be represented and expressed by a collaboration of numerous other conscious particles. It is a kind of an ensemble show, it is like a symphony or a group effort. The advanced and the greatest spiritual travelers have perfected this art of synchronization for the sake of their existence. This is the only standard model known and practiced around the entire creation. This makes highly elevated sages reinforce and refurbish this for the sake of further consolidation of their existence. Based on this model, if consciousness has to be sustained through the contribution of other consciousnesses as necessary, this model runs a risk of breaking down even due to the slightest malfunctioning of the minutest partner at any stage. Tracking down the existence of the core state is needed through which we can exist and preserve ourselves as a unique entity without taking the help of anyone or anything external. We may be just a very ordinary breed of living something on a minor planet of a very average star tucked away in a remote corner of the infinite vastness. Instead of looking upwards towards the sky and all that is there and trying to make sense of our existence, our greed and our stupidity are narrowing our minds, causing havoc to our already myopic vision, and ultimately polluting and destroying ourselves. We have a long, long way to go before we can be termed as truly intelligent.