

Courthouse of Justice

These days the term prison is being implied as a rectification house so that the culprits can understand their misdeeds and take corrective action for their behavior. If the punishment process is not immediately undertaken, the culprits cannot register the purpose behind the current punishment they are undergoing for their past deeds. In such cases, if the purpose of the punishment given by order of the courthouse is not justified, then the punishment stands of no value. It can be that the Ultimate Absolute is playing the ancient universal tune in full consciousness in the process of recreating the creations, otherwise, it can be that the vintage tune was being replayed continuously from His pre-recorded tune, and while listening to the same tune the Creator Himself identifies some glitches in His tune. Therefore, it becomes extremely significant to observe the twists and turns of Absolute's rigorously tested chain of thoughts. His record of Consciousness being present exists since the inception of time, so no situation remains unprecedented in this universe. Our confronted situations seem relatively very nascent since this universe came into existence. Therefore, what seems interesting is if there is any further scope for improvement in this universal tune.

Defending any accumulated sin is done through the perspective of conscience and consciousness. The emotions which arise within any entity are because of the universal tune. Our consciousness is inherited from an effect of the tunes embedded in the Solar system. Here, all the characteristics and ailments are genetically carried forward. The entire solar system is still intrinsically in search of the purpose behind creation and therefore, the entities derived under the influence of such a Solar system instinctively are born without any proper direction toward the purpose of creation. All the emotions we encounter are inherited due to their properties being ingrained in Solar energy. The thoughts that count as sin, are all genetic, 'Solar' inheritance. Our consciousness is like a sophisticated computer that is intelligently programmed, and our conscience can be seen from such a perspective. Based on our input or entry, our conscience responds differently. On observing any organism, we will see that it reacts based on internal conditions and external influences or inputs. To keep the body intact one needs energy. We need food so we get hungry. When external things stimulate us, we get attracted to something or someone. Similarly, when we get frightened, we get repulsive. Every individual is finely programmed uniquely, and by such individualized programming the concept of calibration of any virtue or vice never arises as these responses are inherited directly within our Solar system or can be attributed as a mistake of the programmer who programmed us. The concept of conscience is reflective and abstract as it cannot be placed on a hard cold objective of the universal pedestal. If a soldier kills another soldier thinking that the sovereignty of his motherland may be under threat and the enemy from the other country should be eliminated. This army personnel, being a diehard patriot and extremely devoted to his motherland cannot compromise when his dear country is under attack and sticks to a valid argument. The other soldier thinks that the person from the enemy country is also a simple person like him, having his own small family with a wife and little children. He is just carrying out orders from his superiors and may even not be aware of the political nuances between the two countries involved in the war. The second soldier thinks - "What is the point in killing this man if I truly love my country. I should go and take up the issue with the politicians and higher authorities who are solely responsible for the war". He refrains from killing the enemy soldier. Rating their response to individual conscience, one should be firm and solid enough to have a universal answer to any situation as conscience is based on every individual's level of consciousness. A soul who 20 years back must have thought that it must have been directed from conscience, based on current experience it might not be the case as it is subject to debate. Conscience is subject to debate, dissection, and analysis. The concept which by itself is not objectively concrete, and based on interpretations, should not be eligible to give directives for the liberation of the soul. The conscience is not in an independent state or entity-dependent state to give such directives of liberation at this present moment. The voice of the eternal Void is our conscience as in every situation He kept on responding without ambiguity. If the concept of consciousness is itself nebulous, we can safely keep it aside either due to the 'Solar' inheritance or from a programmed consciousness's view. In such a case, an entity may not accumulate any sin. All the cases against the souls who are not liberated needed to be summarily dismissed as they suffered for ages due to a narrow vision of soul liberation and poor capacity for judgment and discrimination.
