

The 'Divine Aloneness'

The compulsive search is clearly what drives the endeavor of incessant never-ending yearning to find the Absolute. Whenever a highly elevated soul descends to Earth, an indescribable aloneness awaits an elevated one. This is because the domain beyond the mind from which such a soul descends is made of stuff so exquisitely fine and pure that its very nature is in sharp contrast to our world. The intensity and extensity of aloofness or solitary nature witnessed in such high-level souls cannot be understood by common human beings. However, in the case of highest spiritual souls, it would be profoundly appropriate to consider them in a saturated, fulfilled, and contented state which we can describe as 'Divine Aloneness' that makes them detached and remain away from ordinary human encroachment. Only a saturated and contented soul can effortlessly move between transcendental and phenomenal states in a mind-boggling manner. Common ordinary people are invariably drawn only towards sense enjoyment and a mad pursuit of wealth, power, and fame, which, in turn, causes them to suffer from misery. On the other hand, for the highest form of elevated souls, the pull of the transcendental is too strong to be kept in abeyance, which causes such souls to gravitate frequently into profound deep meditative awareness. Ordinary people have their own logic to perform and pursue a certain set of goals. They may have their own regulations of priorities, which when seen from an elevated platform of consciousness, may appear to be quite irrational and foolish. This makes it very difficult for an elevated one to easily mingle with ordinary people, who stand very low on the ladder of consciousness, irrespective of their society-governed high educational or social ranking. The indigenous aloofness from worldly affairs and a spontaneous indifference, rather than nonchalance, and at times disregard, towards society's ironclad-structures identify such a high-level soul. Higher levels of souls living on elevated platforms normally become bewildered and unenthusiastic about a society that is mostly ignorant and unconscious. The true purpose of life, the ultimate blooming of our inner self, can be accomplished only if we can sublimate our unripe ego into a ripened one— an ego that perfectly reflects the Absolute Pure Consciousness, or which functions as only a servant of that Absolute Pure Consciousness, or Absolute attainment. Considered from a physical perspective, we may be away from Absolute Pure Consciousness, but spiritually, HE resides inside every devotee's heart and every soul of true radiance.
