Cryptography of Universe

The most interesting side of the language of the universe through which the universe is continuously sending us messages is its resemblance to cryptography, they are not secret, and that's the most brilliant part of the messages, anyone can see them, but no one knows what they mean unless one has the key. Overlooking with respectful detachment, the idea known as consciousness, if one looks at the grand design of the universe, it often resembles a very sophisticated machine, programmed from time immemorial. One could understand the programmed part, but what should interest us was whether the machine was reprogrammable or not. To outsmart a smart machine what we only need is a smarter variety. Once we approach and attack it in earnest, it surrenders. The grand universal machine continues relentlessly on the backdrop of unending nights of intergalactic space. It survives on two distinct fuels, two different calls, one from nature, and another from grand space. While nature wants to embrace us, the Void says– 'bloom and reveal yourself'. All that the universe is filled up with is only these two sounds.